seem to be: hire more people with [any, what seem like, and what aren't, but are for ...] varied interests; for example; n.r.c. knows such-and-such with such-and-such interests which may be useful: [as in n.r.c.'s word or n.r.c.'s paraphrased word recommendation]

n.r.c. (seems to gear you to:) become un-interested in your choice of at least: now; executive command; so the "advice" continues from n.r.c. Now instead of considering your options with your already choice; you have to at least so expects the n.r.c. consider un-related options.

So the primary thing is: these are not equal or the same executive commands; one is executive command of something and the other is "executive command" in this context where the quotations imply a not real title.

of course a basic thing might then be; to define for a basic review what might mean: executive command in real context: so here no quotations for this quotation syntax application and base it here on this internal context:

-have access to a geo-sphere space site: be able to comprehend the revenue avenue you've selected [and this might be formalized if in case of no cash; or low cash; then, other benefits: and-or training completed]

note, then in the second [so-far] or actual internal context of executive command we don't have despite an accessible identity a provided experience/training. [why might that be.]
